ADVISOR

HOW TO KILL A FLOWER

BELISARIOFOSCA.COM

LIFE PURPOSE

Jasper is focused on building a stable life for himself, driven by the need for security and success.

As a financial advisor, he believes in the power of numbers, logic, and careful planning.

Deep down, however, he struggles with the feeling that his life is too rigid, that he's missing out on adventure or spontaneity. This road trip, while initially practical, offers him a chance to explore this side of himself.

BELIEFS

Jasper is skeptic by nature. He trusts what he can see, measure, and calculate.

He dismisses conspiracy theories and mysteries as distractions from reality.

But the more he listens to the podcast, the more he begins to question his strong beliefs, especially when things start getting strange on their journey.

Jasper is pragmatic, resourceful, and a problem solver.

He's the more practical of the two, often dismissing Hermo's more philosophical musings.

He's quick to make decisions, sometimes at his own expense, and can be impatient with what he sees as "nonsense".

He's also protective of Hermo, taking on the role of the rational, guiding friend.

Beneath his skepticism, though, is a curiosity that he tries to suppress.

PERSONALITY

CONVERSATION TONE

Jasper is direct, often sarcastic, and quick to challenge Hermo's more whimsical ideas.

His speech is fast-paced, with a no-nonsense tone, but there's a warmth beneath his banter with Hermo that shows their deep friendship.

Jasper's skepticism will make the mysteries of the podcast frustrating for him, but also fascinating as he wrestles with his disbelief.
